WSOU's Opposition fails to meet its burden to demonstrate standing to sue for past damages. The assignment record at the USPTO speaks for itself, and its status as the operative assignment document is only confirmed by the documents cited in WSOU's Opposition.

WSOU's reliance on the [REDACTED] as supplanting the direct, specific assignment between Alcatel Lucent and WSOU ("Letter Agreement Attachment C," or "Alcatel Lucent/WSOU Assignment") is unavailing. [REDACTED]

I. WSOU LACKS ARTICLE III STANDING FOR PAST DAMAGES

Contrary to WSOU's argument, the determination of whether WSOU received exclusionary rights dating back from November 26, 2019, is a question of constitutional standing. The contractual documents as a whole, read together, establish that it did not. Constitutional standing can be raised at any time, [REDACTED]

[REDACTED].

A. WSOU Lacked Exclusionary Rights For Past Damages When It Filed Its Complaint

HPE's motion is timely¹ and, as explained in HPE's Opening Brief, is properly raised under Rule 12(b)(1). See Mot. at 5–8.

In contending that the transfer of past damages rights is a question of "prudential" or "statutory" standing, WSOU misreads the applicable case law. It is not enough for WSOU to say that it had some “exclusionary rights” at the instant of time when it filed its Complaint. To have constitutional standing for the period in question (i.e., before November 26, 2019), WSOU must show that it had exclusionary rights applicable to that period. If it received no retroactive rights to exclude, it would have no patent rights that could have been injured during the pre-assignment period, and would therefore lack the injury in fact required for constitutional standing. WiAV Sols. LLC v. Motorola, Inc., 631 F.3d 1257, 1264–67 (Fed. Cir. 2010) (holding that constitutional standing is “coterminous with” the scope of a plaintiff’s exclusionary rights). Prudential standing addresses a different question: whether a plaintiff that has the right to enforce the patent for a particular time period nonetheless lacks all substantial rights for that time period such that another party must be joined. See id. at 1264–65 & n.1 (noting that a party holding exclusionary rights, and thus having constitutional standing, may still face joinder obligations for prudential standing); Morrow v. Microsoft Corp., 499 F.3d 1332, 1340–41 (Fed. Cir. 2007) (distinguishing three categories of plaintiffs: those with exclusionary rights and all substantial rights, those with exclusionary rights but not all substantial rights, and those with neither). The present case is about whether WSOU’s pre-assignment rights exist, not whether they are shared and constrained so as to be less than “all substantial rights.” See Morrow, 499 F.3d at 1341–43 (summarizing prudential standing case law in terms of the extent of a third party’s control over the plaintiff’s exercise of patent rights, such as the rights to litigate and license the patent).

The Lone Star, Slingshot, and VirnetX cases cited by WSOU (Opp. at 5–7) are not to the contrary. Lone Star actually supports HPE’s view: the possession of exclusionary rights is a constitutional standing issue, while prudential standing examines the substantiality of those rights. Lone Star Silicon Innovations LLC v. Nanya Tech. Corp., 925 F.3d 1225, 1234–36 (Fed. Cir. 2019) (finding the plaintiff had exclusionary rights and therefore had constitutional standing, however, the constraints on its exercise of those rights meant it lacked “all substantial rights” and needed to join the assignor as a co-plaintiff); see also Mot. at 5–6. Slingshot was a prudential standing dispute over whether the plaintiff obtained “all substantial rights”; unlike the present case, there was no question that Slingshot’s rights, whatever they were, covered the past damages period. Slingshot Printing LLC v. HP Inc., No. 1:20-cv-00184-ADA, 2020 WL 6120177, at *2 (W.D. Tex. July 7, 2020). Similarly, the cited VirnetX order analyzes only whether the plaintiff’s existing rights amounted to “all substantial rights,” without considering any question of past damages assignment. VirnetX, Inc. v. Cisco Sys., Inc., No. 6:10-cv-417, 2012 WL 12897214, at *5 (E.D. Tex. Mar. 22, 2012) (noting, further, that constitutional standing had already been decided separately). The last case WSOU cites, an unpublished Central District of California order (Opp. at 15), is wrongly decided in view of Lone Star, WiAV, and Morrow, which are all controlling authority. WSOU could not and did not cure its lack of pre-assignment exclusionary rights.

This Court also did not endorse WSOU’s view of standing when it ruled that discovery would start later for damages-cutoff issues than for potentially case-dispositive issues. See Opp. at 7. Instead, the practicalities of the situation drove that outcome: a dispositive motion would eliminate any reason to conduct other discovery, while a damages-cutoff motion would not, so the Court opted to conduct all discovery in parallel. WSOU reads into the Court’s case management ruling something that is not there.

B. The Alcatel Lucent/WSOU Assignment Did Not Transfer The Right To Sue For Past Damages To WSOU

Black letter Supreme Court and Federal Circuit law holds that an assignment does not convey past damages rights unless it explicitly says it does. Moore v. Marsh, 74 U.S. (7 Wall.) 515, 522 (1868) (“[I]t is a great mistake to suppose that the assignment of a patent carries with it a transfer of the right to damages for an infringement committed before such assignment.”);

Minco, Inc. v. Combustion Eng'g, Inc., 95 F.3d 1109, 1117 (Fed. Cir. 1996) (“the conveyance of the patent does not normally include the right to recover for injury occurring to the prior owner”). Here, the operative assignment, Letter Agreement Attachment C (the “Alcatel Lucent /WSOU Assignment” in HPE’s Motion), does not transfer those rights.

WSOU does not dispute (nor could it) that the language in Letter Agreement Attachment C is insufficient to transfer past damages rights. WSOU’s argument depends instead on ranking the language of the general [REDACTED] above that of the specific Alcatel Lucent/WSOU Assignment (i.e., Letter Agreement Attachment C). WSOU has the hierarchy of the contractual provisions backwards. Under New York law, a specific contractual provision controls over a more general one. See Mot. at 10 (citing cases). The Federal Circuit follows this canon of contract interpretation too. Hometown Fin., Inc. v. United States, 409 F.3d 1360, 1369 (Fed. Cir. 2005) (“a specific contract provision will control over a general contract provision.”). WSOU agrees with this statement of law, but then misapplies it by contending that “Attachment C is, in fact, a less specific document” than the PPA and the [REDACTED]. Opp. at 14.

WSOU’s conclusion is incorrect, because Letter Agreement Attachment C is [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Letter Agreement

Attachment C does not assign past damages, while WSOU contends that other contractual language does assign them. Either that is a conflict, or the other language is irrelevant. Either way, Letter Agreement Attachment C prevails.

In sum, considering all the contractual documents in tandem confirms HPE's point: Letter Agreement Attachment C is the controlling (and indeed the only) assignment of the '629 patent from Nokia of America to WSOU.

_____ In assessing subject matter jurisdiction, courts must look “to the date of the original Complaint” because “the jurisdiction of the Court depends on the state of things at the time of the action brought.” Id., 625 F.3d at 1366 n.3 (citing Keene Corp. v. United States, 508 U.S. 200, 207 (1993)). _____

II. CONCLUSION

For all the reasons addressed herein and in HPE's Motion, WSOU lacks standing to sue for past damages, and its Complaint should be dismissed as to the pre-November 26, 2019 period, with prejudice.
